Trump's crude hypocrisy shows India's energy security cannot rely on American goodwill

On January 4, 1980, after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, then US President Jimmy Carter embargoed 17 million tonnes of American grain sales to Moscow. It was the moral position. It was also ruinous for Iowa. On April 24, 1981, President Ronald Reagan, who had called the Soviet Union an evil empire in all but name, lifted the embargo to honour a campaign promise to farmers. The next year, Washington imposed sanctions on European companies supplying equipment for the Urengoy gas pipeline; and in 1983, signed a new long-term agreement to sell the Soviets more wheat. Europe's leaders asked the obvious question: why must Europe forgo Soviet pipeline revenue while America sells the Soviets grain? They never received an answer. The farm belt was the answer.Forty-five years later, the farm belt has not moved. On September 18, 2026, President of the United States signed the Lindsey O. Graham Sanctioning Russia and Iran Act (SRIA) of 2026, authorising tariffs of up to 100 per cent on countries that buy Russian energy. The law was aimed at India and China. On October 9, twenty-one days later, the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) issued a temporary general licence permitting Russian diesel to flow to American and global markets until April 7, 2027.

Under the arrangement announced the same day, Russia will supply 3,00,000 tonnes of diesel immediately, 5,00,000 tonnes in November, 1 million tonnes thereafter, and up to 3 million more depending on the state of its refineries. Roughly 36 million barrels in all. The same barrel of Russian petroleum that funds the Kremlin's war machine when it lands in an Indian refinery apparently stabilises the global economy when it lands in an American one. The proximate cause is not hidden. Retail diesel in the United States touched $6.28 a gallon on October 9, against $3.68 a gallon the year earlier, with midterm elections due in November. The International Energy Agency (IEA) estimates the world is short of about 1.6 million barrels of diesel a day after strikes on refineries in Iran and Russia. Even delivered in full, the promised Russian volumes plug that gap for about three weeks. The licence will not resolve the shortage. The White House hopes that this will move the price before the first Tuesday of November. In 1981, the constituency was wheat. In 2026, it is the diesel that harvests it. Set this against the sermon. In September 2025, President Donald Trump told the United Nations General Assembly that countries buying Russian energy were "funding the war against themselves".

Through 2026, India was threatened with secondary tariffs for doing precisely what Washington has now licensed itself to arrange. India, which imports more than 85 per cent of its crude, bought •4.1 billion of Russian crude in August 2026, according to the Centre for Research on Energy and Clean Air. Russia supplied 33 per cent of India's crude imports by value in 2025, United Nations trade data show. For India, an opposing law. For Washington's own diesel deal, a licence. Strip the episode to first principles and ask what a sanction is for. Ex ante, it is presented as a moral instrument, raising the cost of aggression. Ex post, its character is revealed by three tests: who gets exempted; when the exemption arrives; and whose convenience it serves. Apply the tests to the record of 2026. In March, after the Iran war began, the IEA coordinated a 400 million barrel release, the largest on record, and the Treasury quietly issued waivers allowing countries, India included, to keep buying Russian oil already in transit.

On October 2, the G7 agreed to release another 100 million barrels. On October 9 came the general licence. At every point where principle collided with the American pump price, the pump price won. Even the design of the original price cap—set at $44.10 for Urals crude—conceded the point. The objective was never to remove Russian oil from the market. It was to keep Russian oil flowing while capping Russian revenue. Russia's oil and gas tax receipts for January to September 2026 fell 17 per cent, from ?6.61 trillion (ruble) to ?5.47 trillion, even with Urals above $92, because output has fallen to a 17-year low. Indian purchases were never the binding constraint. They were the available scapegoat. Five implications follow for India. First, energy security cannot be subcontracted to another country's electoral calendar. The supplier mix, refinery configuration and reserve policy are strategy, not tactics. The finance minister's point that Indian refineries are built for medium-sour crude is a technical fact.
